Silence

Written by Victoria DiMartino sitting on silhouettes is when whispers are most likely to be heard.faint voices are to be delicate for the shadows to hear the innocence of silence is too much for children listening to sound is like hearing the secrets in your cars

made from telling stories to the mind relish ungoldly hours that free you from half of your soul
as time went by and started to fade washed away and only heard in wisps grass has words of thorns that prick at a season always like sparks that don't want to fade
beneath the branches green vines whisper secrets in your ears too quiet for the lights to hear in the shade

ABOUT THE AUTHOR:

Victoria DiMartino is a fiction and poetry writer from Long Island, New York. When she's not writing, she likes to spend time with people. Whether that's hanging out with friends or through volunteer work, people are the center of her world. Victoria wants her writing to inspire people to get to know one another better.
